Echigo Beer Company, known as Japan's first microbrewery for being the first brewery licensed after Japan changed its beer licensing laws in 1993, has updated its usual line-up with their Flying IPA. Usually focusing on ales such as red, white, and pale, the Flying IPA is a welcome change and offers more hoppy deliciousness with a semi-sweet barley backbone.

Echigo's Flying IPA is refreshingly sharp and bitter with a clear, golden body. First starting with heavy citrus and grapefruit aromas, this beer has an almost creamy mouthfeel and a light to medium body. The flavours are simple yet work surprisingly well together; bitter hop and sweet malt characteristics make this solid IPA stand out from other Japanese IPAs. This beer is heavily influenced by American IPA styles which is apparent in the high amount of hop character this beer holds.
